

HEADSTONE MANOR & MUSEUM

A message from....
Bill the Duck!

Good afternoon time travellers! 🙌 Since it's sunny, Margery and I are going to look around the grounds. Did you know that the museum has two original barns on site? They were both used when the Manor was a working farm! Margery says both barns are very old, and she even found some pictures of my Great Grand-duck Billeth in front of them! When you arrive at the Museum, you enter through the Small Barn, built in 1550. The Small Barn caught on fire in the late 1970s, and had to be rebuilt - it looks lovely now, and you can watch a film all about Harrow inside it. The Great Barn originates from around 1506, and was converted into the Harrow Museum and Heritage Centre in 1986. When the Manor House was restored as the new museum in 2017, the barn was also restored and is now a venue for fabulous weddings and gatherings! Sometimes I sneak in when the doors are open in the summertime ;) The barn isn't normally open for visitors, but if you come to Headstone Village Show in summer, you could have a look inside too!

Great Grand-duck Billeth in front of the Small Barn before the fire

Small Barn after the fire in the 1980s

KEEP OUT
DANGEROUS
BUILDING

The Small Barn today!
Didn't they do a good job restoring it?

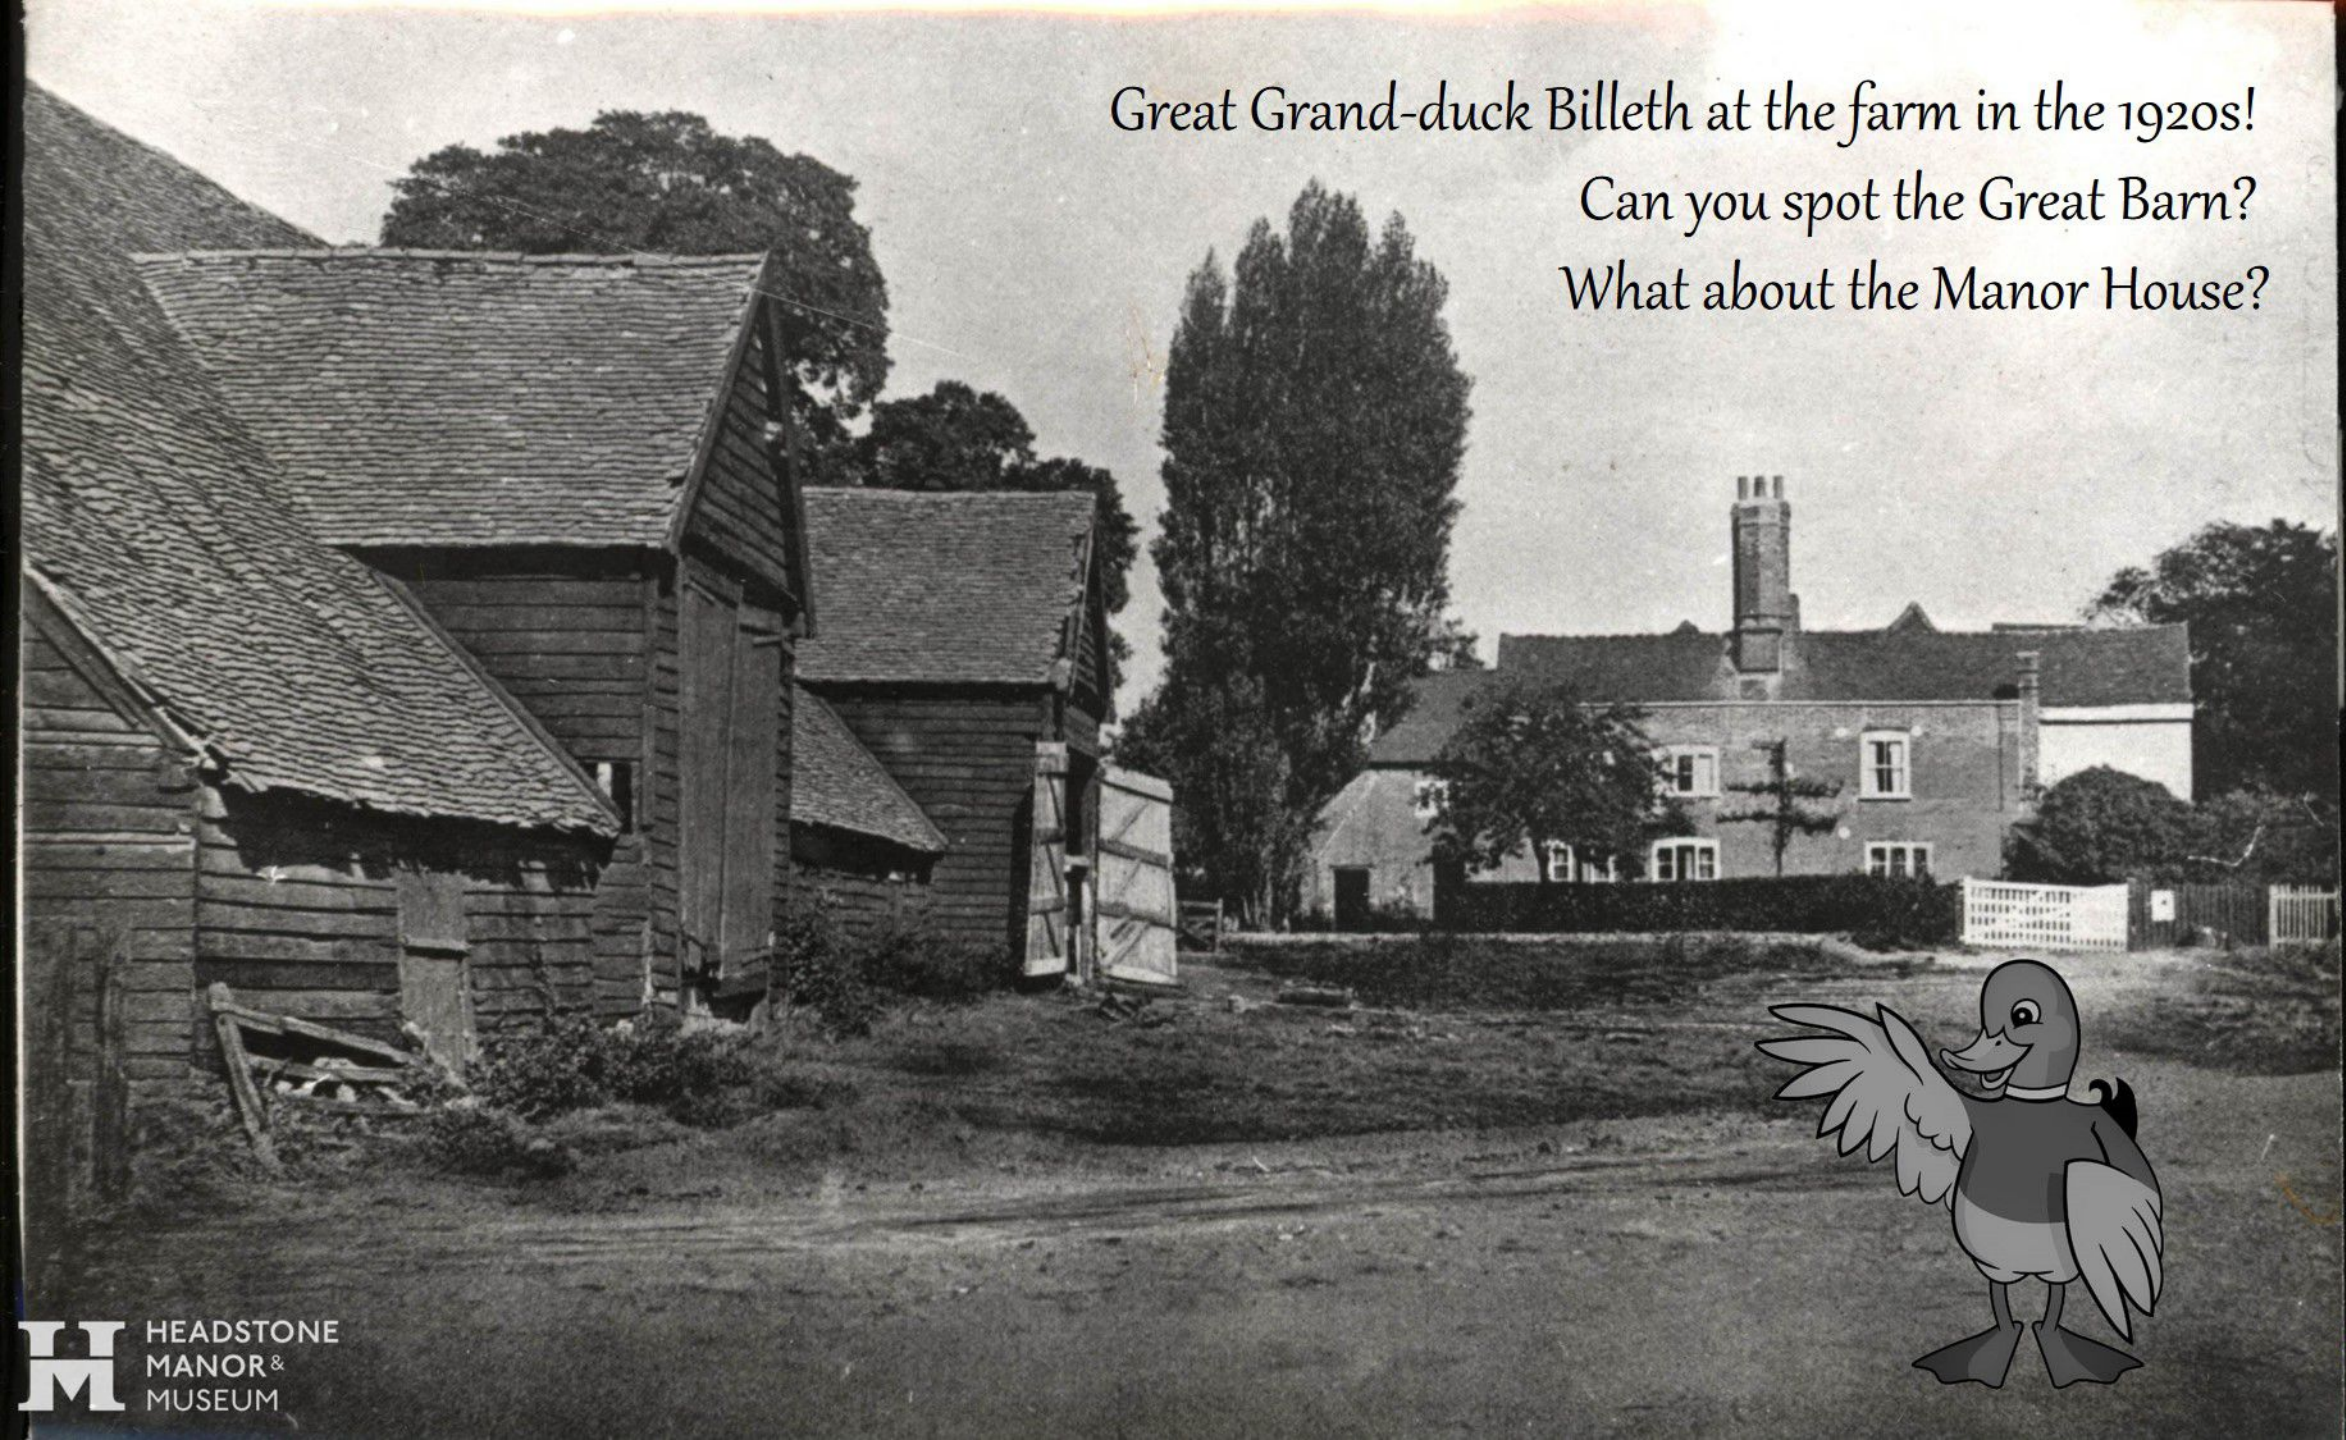

Sit here to watch a movie all about
Harrow inside the Small Barn!

Great Grand-duck Billeth at the farm in the 1920s!

Can you spot the Great Barn?
What about the Manor House?

Here I am at the Great Barn back when it was Harrow Museum!
Raise your hand if you visited the Museum here!

Here's the Great Barn today.

At special events throughout the year you can still go inside!

Here's what the Great Barn looks like inside!
It's a beautiful place for a wedding –
I wonder if they do duck weddings, too?