Dressing Gown 1930's

This was remade from Victorian material by a dressmaker during WW2 rationing. The government's 'Make Do and Mend' scheme encouraged people to repair or recycle their clothing.

Fizzlebang

Roof Tile

This burnt medieval roof tile was found in the River Thames and gifted to the museum. We wonder if it was from a building destroyed in the Great Fire of London?

Dinky

Coin

This is called a Cartwheel Twopence. It is from the reign of King George III and has the date 1797 on it. How long ago was that?

Clockmort

Vase, 1969

This is a Banjo Vase made by the Whitefriars Glass factory in Wealdstone. The vase is in the colour 'cinnamon' and it has a bumpy texture like tree bark. Can you see why it called a Banjo Vase?

Rumbuckle

Jelly Mould

This mould sits on our Victorian cookery table. Moulds were a simpler way of making decorative jellies and took much less time to make. Savoury jellies were just as popular as sweet!
